Police were alerted to reports of a woman damaging cars in a number of streets. Anji was seen running down one of the streets, holding a hammer. When police officers stopped Anji, she gave her correct name and address. She was then arrested for offences of causing criminal damage. However, she was later released without charge when it was discovered that she had no connection with the damage to the cars.

A police emergency call handler received a confused telephone call from a worried neighbour suggesting that someone had been shot in an ongoing domestic incident. In fact, though Brice had produced a gun during the incident, he had not fired it at anyone. The call handler later discovered this, but she did not pass the information on. By the time armed police attended the incident, Brice had violently beaten his ex-partner, Callie, and her new boyfriend, Duke, and dragged them into the garden.

Having regard to the right to life under Article 2 of the European Convention on Human Rights, advise the police as to whether they are liable for any breach of the Human Rights Act 1998 s6 in connection with the death of Brice.

At the gates of the factory, the marchers sat down to listen to a speech by Gerson. Gerson suddenly ran forward and chained himself securely to the gates. Other demonstrators surrounded him to prevent the police from intervening. There were scuffles between the police and demonstrators. Employees of FullRange Foods, who could not enter the factory, verbally abused Gerson and other demonstrators and threatened physical injury. After 45 minutes, the senior police officer present directed that the protest and demonstration must end and that Gerson must be cut free. Officers then arrested Gerson and numerous other demonstrators for breach of the peace. Subsequently, Halima, Gerson and other demonstrators were convicted of various public order offences.

In your answer, include consideration of whether they may challenge their subsequent convictions for public order offences.

Karin then asked Jane to come to the police station to check CCTV footage to see if she could identify two suspected burglars of a pharmacy. When Jane seemed reluctant to do so, Karin took Jane to the police car and drove her to the police station. Jane did not recognise the suspects, though they were later arrested and charged. After two hours at the police station, Jane was told to go home and no charges were brought against her.

Assess the role of the judge in the trial of the two suspected burglars.
